Thomas Kitwood's Person-Centered Care for Dementia Person-centered care also encourages and empowers the caregiver to understand the person with dementia as having personal beliefs, remaining abilities, life experiences and relationships that are important to them and contribute to who they are as a person. Caring for those with dementia: the person-centred approach It is often concerning to me that we somehow view person-centred care in the context of dementia care as somehow different from other types of care provision. Of course it is different in that people living with dementia have particular care needs arising from the effects of dementia on their life, and this needs care to be provided in particular ways to meet these needs. Person Centred Care for older people with dementia We use an approach known as "person-centred care"™. This means focusing on the person and not the dementia, remembering that each individual has a rich personal history and a unique approach to life.
